throughout the play, there is a tension between its attempt to faithfully document the prison system and its absurdist quality of theatre which is fascinating to watch.

Taylor is a sociologist at Michigan State University, where he researches urban communities and violence and serves as an adviser to Michigan’s prisons and juvenile detention centers.

In winter, the low-angled sun shines on the collectors and heats them.